Sunday School: Colombia's Discipleship Lifeline

By Scott Harrup

ARMED GUERRILLAS manned the roadblock deep in the Colombian jungle. When they stopped him, Pastor Jorge* explained that he and the 13 passengers filling the old church van were on their way to a ministry event in Medellin. Nothing remotely political. But there was no dispelling the hostility in the air. No other option but to make a U-turn and retrace much of their route.

It was 2 p.m., they had been driving since 7 that morning, and they would not reach Medellin until early the next morning after traversing difficult passes through the Andes Mountains. Exhausted, they slept in the van in the parking lot of the host church until the doors opened for the conference.

The all-important event they were attending? A seminar on teaching Sunday School.

Call for Unity

The church van's occupants were one group among many that made similar determined journeys to eight cities where the Colombia Assemblies of God was revitalizing Sunday School as a long-dormant discipleship ministry. A team from the US Assemblies of God provided teacher training in conjunction with a gift of starter curriculum to all 1,200 AG churches in Colombia.

Rebekah Clute, Spanish Editorial Manager for the US AG national office, was overwhelmed by the response to her team's February visit.

"I was blown away; I think the Colombian churches were blown away," she says. "Edwin Arce, our featured instructor, trained more than 3,000 people in eight cities in two weeks. There was standing room only. It was probably the most rewarding trip I've had in my 19 years of traveling throughout Latin America and doing training sessions. What made this one so different, I believe, was the national executive leadership and executive presbyters in Colombia and their unified commitment to relaunch Sunday School."

"This training went beyond our expectations, and attendance far surpassed our projections," says Janio Acosta Elles, a presbyter for Colombia's coastal region. "We planned for around 300 attendees, but more than 900 people filled the sanctuary! This has served to motivate our churches to pick up the challenge of teaching Sunday School once again and to do it with excellence."

The impetus for the seminar came directly from Colombia's top AG leaders. General Superintendent Humberto Fajardo visited the United States in April 2017 with General Treasurer Jairo Cruz and Church Education Director Alex Gomez. As they met with missions and publications leaders in the US AG, they expressed their desire to see Sunday School regain momentum in their national Fellowship.

"We found that our churches were lacking unity in teaching our Pentecostal doctrine," Superintendent Fajardo says.

"Many churches had done away with Sunday School completely, which has left a generation without knowing what we believe and why."

Our executive leadership met and discussed how we needed to return to our roots, and it was unanimous that we relaunch Sunday School using the Assemblies of God curriculum. It is our belief that this will unify our churches and make them stronger."

Julie Horner, Senior Director of Publishing at the US AG national office, participated in the meetings and recognized this appeal for help was a powerful ministry opportunity.

"This was a chance to partner with the Colombia AG in bringing systematic discipleship back into their churches," she says. "I love discipleship and teaching Sunday School and passing along that love to others. I pray we can see that same excitement in our US churches too."

Commitment and Partnership

The gift of curriculum provided Colombia's 1,200 churches with six months of weekly lesson materials. The initial gift of curriculum was made possible as Light for the Lost and BGMC came alongside My Healthy Church to pay for the printing of curriculum from toddler to adult levels. The Colombian church invested in the shipment and the taxes to bring the resources in and then distributed them to all the churches.

"Churches started their Sunday School programs immediately, and we worked hard to print additional student materials," Julie says.

"We pray that this curriculum will be used to see many boys and girls, men and women, come to faith in Jesus Christ, be discipled by the Word, and understand His purposes for their lives," says Doug Clay, US AG general superintendent. "We rejoice with the spirit of revival that is happening in Colombia. They captured our hearts when they shared their vision of renewing Sunday School and discipleship."

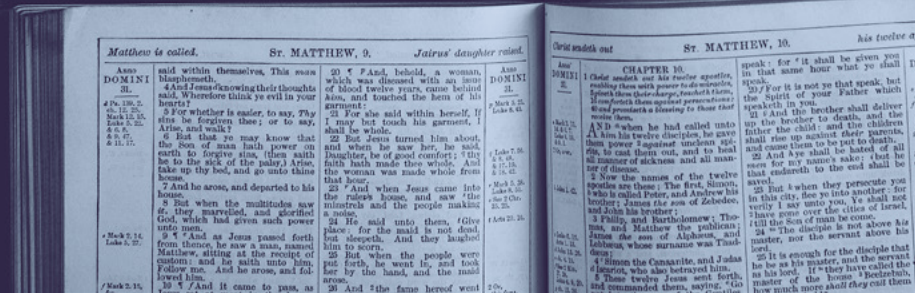

For Pastor Jorge and his church team, the drive home would be arduous as they renegotiated the Andes mountain passes. But they were far from discouraged.

"Just to be here to celebrate Christ together and fellowship one with another is a blessing for us," Pastor Jorge told Rebekah. "What a surprise to also receive these beautiful Sunday School resources. Truly an unexpected gift that will help us grow and mature our people in their faith. Thank you. Words can't express our gratitude."

Giving Selflessly

“ALL I WANT for my birthday is Bibles,” one eight-year-old boy in Louisiana announced. “There are people in Bosnia who don’t have Bibles, and I want Bibles for my birthday so I can mail them to Bosnia.”

We’re all selfish by nature, which means giving selflessly is not a natural trait whether you’re five years old or 50. Isn’t that why we have to teach our kids as early as toddlers not to hoard their toys but to share them with others?

Compassion is the biblical value that teaches us to care more about others than we do about ourselves. Interestingly, it seems that compassion can be taught and caught if it is emphasized while kids are still young. Kids can become individuals who give selflessly.

Teaching kids about the lost people of the world stirs something godly in their spirits. When they learn about the plight of underprivileged kids around the world, who live without shelter, clothing, food, or water, something stirs in their hearts and compassion is born. Kids begin to care at a young age. Caring is followed by praying. Praying is followed by sacrificially giving, and giving is followed by going.

Statistics show that many, many kids who were taught about missions not only developed a heart of compassion at a very young age, but continued on this missionary journey their whole lives. Not only did they become missionaries, they lived for God their entire lives. A heart filled with godly compassion became a steadfast anchor throughout their lives.

My wife, Mary, and I lead the kids’ missions arm of our fellowship called Boys and Girls Missionary Challenge (BGMC). When children hear about the needs of people around the world, they learn to care about others. Once they care, they want to act. It’s a God-given passion that resides within them—ready to be touched by the Spirit of God. When a child chooses to pray for the lost, it is because the child has begun to care. Caring is at the heart of compassion. A child with a compassionate heart begins to see that life has value when it is spent serving others.

That’s why giving selflessly is such an important goal to teach kids. When we teach them to care about the lost people of the world, the poor of the world, and the needy people in their own towns, we help them to understand that each of us has value in God’s kingdom. We give them the opportunity to become like the good Samaritan.

So often we hear of kids who are called to full-time Christian service after they have been involved in selfless giving. When they are immersed in praying for the lost of the world and giving selflessly to help the needy in their communities, their hearts are open to hear God say “Well done!” And they hear His call into full-time service.

BUILDING SPIRITUAL DEPTH INTO OUR KIDS

By David Boyd

When nine-year-old Michael collected Bibles for Bosnia, his heart was stirred with compassion. Because his heart was tender and open to the Spirit of God, he heard God say, “You are to go to Bosnia as a missionary, now. Not when you grow up; you are to go now.” Michael was thrilled. He told his parents that God wanted them to become missionaries and move to Bosnia.

As you can imagine, his parents were quite shocked, but they had also heard a call from God to be missionaries. They just didn’t know where. In the years that followed, this family did become missionaries to the country of Bosnia.

Kids hear the voice of God. Their compassionate hearts are ready to be filled with the Spirit of God. Giving selflessly is a vital step in developing deep and abiding faith in the heart of a child. As they give selflessly, kids will also want to actively serve. As kids share their talents, they begin to know who they are and how they can contribute to the kingdom of God.

Excerpt from chapter 10 of Strong Enough to Last
By David Boyd

Based on eight major goals for kids ministry, David Boyd provides insight on how to help kids become believers who are strong enough to last through the most difficult challenges of life.

HOW TO
SUNDAY SCHOOL
MISSION'S

TEACHING YOUR SUNDAY SCHOOL

classes about missions is one thing, but giving them a chance to apply what they've learned might seem a bit more complicated. With a few simple ideas and a little creativity, you'll be able to get everyone—kids, youth, and adults—involved outside of class.

ADULTS

1 Prayer focus. Check out the Light for the Lost (LFTL) Facebook page for missionaries in need of prayer. Each week you can assign your class the next name on the list as a special prayer focus for the week. Involve the whole church by asking the pastor if you can put the prayer focus names in the bulletin!

2 Missionary guests. When missionaries visit, check in with your pastor to see if they're also available to visit your class for prayer and fellowship. If you check the visitation schedule, you can encourage your class to collect a love offering ahead of the visit to bless your visitor(s).

3 Connect with LFTL. Call your district office and get in touch with the district LFTL director in your area and find out what special projects were created for your district. For more information, call your district office.

YOUTH

1 Bake sale. Go the traditional route and pick a missionary need your class can cover with a simple bake sale. If your church has a kitchen, you can hold class there one week and prepare the sale together! Ask your students to figure out how to advertise the sale and get volunteers to staff the event to ensure your students are involved in every part of the project.

2 Prayer Partners. Have your students pair up and set times during the week to get together and pray for your church's missionaries. Partners can meet in person, video chat, or even send text reminders to each other.

3 Sacrificial saving. Brainstorm with your students about how they can set aside a little money every week. Things like an allowance, coffee budget, or part-time job income can be great ways to teach them how setting aside something small each week can add up to a significant amount.

KIDS

1 BGMC YouTube Channel. Send home cards telling your kids' parents how to help them check out free missions videos from Boys & Girls Missionary Challenge (BGMC). The BGMC channel has more than 70 great videos that can introduce your class to the world and its needs.

2 Map of the world. Each Sunday have your students put a pin in a country they'd like to pray for that week. Ask them to research that country with their parents or guardians to learn what the nation's prayer needs are.

3 Missionary letters. Help the kids write letters of encouragement to your church's missionaries. You can even have them bring in foods that are lightweight and non-perishable to include goody boxes with your letters! Pray over the packages and notes as a class before you send them off.
